September, 1991

CONTENTS

Editorial.................................................. 2
President's Report........................................ 3
A constructivist approach to educational computing
Jim Ridgway and Don Passey.............................. 4
Intellectually handicapped children: development of hieroglyphic symbols
R. A. Coldwell........................................... 10
Learning in virtual worlds
Alistair Inglis............................................. 13
Expert systems in education: new opportunities or threats to the learning environment
Goran Nydahl.............................................. 16
Self-directed learning and critiquing systems
Bent B. Andresen......................................... 20
Myddleham — mystery, motivation and meaningful learning
Les Watson and Bill Tocknell............................ 23
Kids, classrooms and computers in the IT age
Phillip Callen............................................. 26
Educational computing and the problem of cultural amplification
C. A. Bowers.............................................. 30
Computers and educational systems
Alfred Bork............................................... 34
‘Writing’ with computers — a metaphor?
Carolyn Dowling........................................ 38

Call for articles
Readers are invited to contribute articles for future editions of this journal.
Articles should be no longer than 4000 words and include an abstract of 100-150 words. Contributions are asked to provide a brief autobiographical statement.
Deadlines: Friday 13 March for May 1992
Friday 10 July for September 1992

Have your say
Why not share your interest and concerns about educational computing by writing a letter to the editor of Australian Educational Computing.
Address all correspondence to:
The Editor
Australian Educational Computing
GPO Box 555
Campbelltown NSW 2560